STYLISH HOMES

5 A bamboo garden occupies a double-height space in the centre of this house. Crocus sells a range of bamboo, from £24.99 for a 2l pot. 6 An arrangement of terrariums is a low-input, high-impact way to tap into the trend. Shown here are the Hanging terrarium, £32; and Votive lantern, £15, both Oliver Bonas. 7 Group large trees in a bay window to bring some outdoor freshness inside. Botany has a good selection. 8 A bespoke sideboard-come-planter makes for a stylish room divider. This is Dinesen GrandDouglas flooring, from £97 per sq m. 9 Work the eclectic look by combining indoor plants with luxurious furniture. This is the Fire Monkey sofa, £4,000, Sera of London. 10 An arrangement of sculptural plants looks best in pared-back planters. Find similar at Ferm Living, £32. Dutch agency The Loft designed the interior. 11 Eucalyptus units and a living moss wall bring rainforest styling to this kitchen. Bright Green sells moss walls, from £336 per sq m for Flat Moss. 12 Combine bushy palms in large planters with vintage fittings for a luxurious feel. This bateau bath is the Torridge, from £3,570, Drummonds.

THE INDOOR GARDENER

Whether it's glamorous palms, jungly ferns or miniature succulents, houseplants infuse a space with a verdant, tropical vibe. If it sounds a bit Seventies, that's because it is – this was the decade when plants became a signature part of interior décor – and they're very much back in vogue today as city dwellers become inventive with the way they garden. Supersized plants and exotic trees are the greenery of the moment, but if the craft of gardening doesn't come naturally, why not investigate the plethora of desirable faux options that are now available on the high street?
